Massachusetts Public Documents (P.D.) are primarily annual reports of Massachusetts state agencies, executive offices, commissions, boards and institutions. A few are statistical reports on subjects ranging from children in poverty to returns of corporations to vital statistics. This description of the reports does not do credit to the social and economic history that is contained in these volumes of official state documents which encompass the official observations of the men and women who were the government during the last half of the 19th century.

Within this set of reports you will find many publications of interest that are more than the usual annual report. One example is the Annual Report of the Statistics of Labor (P.D. 15). As you would expect these volumes contain the annual reports on labor, wages and earnings, cost of living, hours of labor, accidents and strikes. This information, both statistical and narrative, is an essential resource for the student of social and economic history. If these volumes contained nothing else, the series would be important. However, P.D. 15 contains special reports on topics as varied as: the condition of working women and children; tenement houses; intemperance; home life; education; sanitation; occupational safety; convict labor; Sunday labor; and health of the worker. This list of topics covered by this annual report demonstrates the active nature of state government at this time. Other reports in the series demonstrate this characteristic as well. In other reports in the Public Documents series you will find the development of farms and farming in the state and counties; the history of the health of the citizens at the state and local levels and the vital statistics of the towns; the state Board of Education reported annually on the condition of education in the counties and towns. These reports represent the public history of the relationship between the state and its people.

This index was compiled to alleviate many of the difficulties of searching these documents for information. One major problem is that agencies and subjects often change P.D. number from year to year. Agencies also change their names with confusing frequency making continuity with a series even more difficult to follow.

To aid in searching, "continues" and "continued by" linking notes to title changes are provided. Where a title changes very little, involving no additional keywords, the term "title varies" is used, followed by variant forms of the name. Where even more insignificant title changes occur, the phrase "title varies slightly" is used. Explanatory notes are also added to clarify and identify important information about a document that is not available in the title.

The index was compiled from a set of the original public documents. From 1857 to 1892 the collection was arranged chronologically by year and numerically by P.D. number within each year. From 1893-1899 the public documents were bound into volumes arranged by subject so that the P.D. numerical arrangement was disrupted. Appendix A to this index is a guide to the P.D. numbers included in each volume.
